(The character answers a call excitedly, speaking with exaggerated joy.)

Character: (Excited) Hello? Guess what? I just got 10 million naira! Ten. Million. Naira! Ha! God is too good o!

(They pause, listening to the person on the other line. Their expression changes to a mix of confusion and disbelief.)

Character: What do you mean, “Don’t waste it?” So, I shouldn’t buy myself the good things of life? Ah ah, it’s my money now!

(They pause again, looking frustrated, then suddenly get a “lightbulb” moment.)

Character: Hmm... wait o... You’re saying I should invest? Like, in real estate? Eh hen, talk fast, how?

(Their tone switches to curiosity and excitement as they start pacing the room.)

Character: So, you mean I can use this N10 million to own part of a fully furnished and say it again (pauses) ehen, a fully furnished and fully serviced apartment in Lekki? And I’ll be earning rent every month—just sitting down and cashing out?

(They pause, faking scepticism.)

Character: Wait first, this thing no be scam? You say them get managers wey go handle everything for me—short-lets, maintenance, everything?

(They pause again, then suddenly burst into laughter.)

Character: Yeh! I don gree! I’m in o! I’m calling them now. But first... do you think they’ll take me on their next estate tour? I want to see this Dubai of Africa with my own two eyes!

(They hang up dramatically and strike a playful pose.)

Character: Ten million naira? Lagos landlord? Eh! God when
